MINISTER SCORES HUSBAND-HUNTERS.

The Reverend Frank G. Tyrrell Mrs. Mande Estes Keany Is Se-Reads a Paper on "The Marriage Market."

SOCIETY METHODS CRITICISED.

Spectacle Presented by Some Maids and Matrons Said to Be Enough to Make Angels Weep.

Husband-hunting maids and matrons of society are viewed with great disfavor by the Reverend Frank G. Tyrrell, paster of Mount Cabanne Christian Church.

In a paper entitled "The Marriage Marwhich he read yesterday morning before the Christian Ministers' Association, he scored what he alleges to be existing conditions, and declared that "a husbandhunter is a spectacle to make the angels weep, whether she be a marriageable young woman, that young woman's mother, or her guardian."

The paper was a chapter from a book which Mr. Tyrrell is preparing on the sub-ject of social conditions. He said, in part: "Mothers with marriageable daughters are to be forgiven a motherly pride in their girls, but shall we so readily forgive them if they go about scheming how they may entrap 'the rich young Gotrox' into an engagement with Susanne or Marion?

gagement with Susanne or Marion?

"Many a social function is arranged not merely to exhibit the wealth of its promoters, but to parade young women before scrutinizing gaze of eager, mate-seeking men. Receptions, balls, dinners, theater parties are all planned with a view to this. 'Prepare the lists, order the invitations engraved; shall we invite many or few? Shall we ask-oh! bother, ask every man that has anything, or has a fair prospect of getting anything. We want men. Here some of our girls are out for the tenth season, and haven't had a proposal yet.

"And the managers of the matrimonial market contrive by all the arts known to the sex to gather together a likely company, warm their blood with wine, loosen their tongues, smother their wits, and give the girls another chance.' Oh, the horror and the humiliation of it!

CRITICISES FASHION. CRITICISES FASHION.

"Look in on the revelers. Listen to the music, beating faster and faster, and madder and madder. The air is thick with mingled perfumes, and hot and stifling. There is a voluptuousness in the cadence of the music itself; everything must contribute to the one great end of firing the imagination, heating the blood and ensuaring the hearts of young men.

music itself; everything must contribute to the one great end of firing the imagination, heating the blood and ensnaring the hearts of young men.

"But they are wily; they are often hardened reprobates, blase and burnt outmen that no rational girl would want for a son-in-law. They have walked along the burning marls of perdition and breathed the sulphurous fumes of the underworld. Their brows are blistered, their characters are bankrupt, their bodies are airendy the walking lazarettos of awful abominations.

"It is to attract and hold the fascinated gaze of such men that pure girls are decked out in meretricious dress and ornament, their skirts a deal too long at the bottom and far too abbreviated at the top, leaving half, the body exposed to the stare of lecherous fellows, whose very glance is enough to wither a rose.

"No one decries the legitimate use of ornament in dress. As long as God has planted roses in her cheeks and stained her lips with the blood of cherries, and kindled stellar fires in her blazing eyes, who shall dare deny her the charms of face and figure and movement, set off by the art of the dressmaker and the jeweler? But beware how you cross the bolint where dress and ornament become sensuous and vulgar. "Let fashionable society reflect but for one moment on the peril of its course, and the certainty of its punishment. What can we expect from marriages thus made? If a beautiful woman has won her husband by nothing more lasting than her physical charms, can she wonder that her happiness is wrecked, and her husband won charms eclipse her own?

"Often that which seems to every observer to be a marriage ceremony at the fragrant altar, with robed priest and garlands of flowers, and whichery of music, is, server to be a marriage ceremony at the fragrant altar, with robed priest and garlands of flowers, and witchery of music, is, if the mask were torn off, the horrid auction of a woman, body and soul, to a libidinous master—a brimstone bargain."

Supreme Court Decides Sixty Days' Notice Not Necessary.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL

Jefferson City, Mo., May 11.—The Supreme Court to-day issued a peremptory writ of mandamus in favor of Norvell-Shapleigh Hardware Company against Sam B. Cook, Secretary of State, to compel him to issue a certificate of increase of capital stock to the company. All of the shares of the company were represented at the meeting when the increase was voted, but the certificate was refused because the customary sixty days' notice had not been given.

This decision is in line with the Riesterer case (160 Missouri, 141), which held that when bonds were issued by a corporation with the unanimous consent of the stockholders the sixty days public notice required by the Constitution and laws was not necessary.

holders the sixty days public notice required by the Constitution and laws was not necessary.

While it was true that the court in this case overruled the McGrath ore 88 Missouri, 229, the Secretary of Snite did not feel warranted under the law in issuing a certificate increasing the capital stock of a corporation unless all the constitutional and statutory provisions had been compiled with, the principal one of which was that the capital stock of a corporation could not be increased without giving the sixty days public notice. The question is now settled in a friendly proceeding invited by the Secretary of State.

Following were the other proceedings in the court to-day:

De Geoffrey vs. St. Louis Merchants' Bridge and Terminal Company; motion to set aside continuance sustained and set for hearing June 15, 1962.

Mrs. Keaney was going to the office of Doctor John Green, Jr., at Beaumont street and Washington avenue. Her mother, Mrs. Hubert R. Estes, accompanied her. When within a few steps of Doctor Green's office the women were confronted by Keaney. "Will you return to my home with me?" he asked.

"No." replied Mrs. Keaney.

"Then you will dio." Keaney is reported by witnesses to have exclaimed, as he grasped his wife by the throat and drew a bottle from his pocket.

Mrs. Keaney screamed, but before her mother or other persons, who were only a few feet away, could go to her assistance, her husband dashed the acid upon her. Keaney, after throwing the acid, ran south on Beaumont street, followed by Samuel Holland of No. 2710 Locust street. The fleeing husband dashed into an alley, and, although followed several blocks, excuped. "No," replied Mrs. Keaney.
